If it be such a precious jewel as the world takes it for, yet they are forced to take it out of dunghills; and accordingly the apottle gives it a value suitable to its extract. South.
 2. To clear with a rake.
 As they take the green appearing ground,
 The russet hay-cock rises. Thomson.
 3. To draw together by violence.
 An eager desire to take together whatsoever might prejudice or any way hinder the credit of apocryphal books, hath caused the collector's pen so to run as it were on wheels, that the mind, which should guide it, had no leisure to think. Hosker, b. v. f. 20.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated!
 How, i' th' name of thrift,
 Does he take this together. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
 A sport more formidable
 Had *take*d together village rabble. Hudibras, p. i.
 Ill-gotten goods are squandered away with as little conscience as they were *take*d together. L'Estrange.
 4. To scour; to search with eager and vehement diligence.
 The statesman *take*s the town to find a plot. Swift.
 5. To heap together and cover.
 Here i' th' sands
 There I'll take up, the post unanctified
 Of murth'rous lechers. Shakespeare, King Lear.
 The blazing wood may to the eye seem great,
 But 'tis the fire *take*d up that has the heat,
 And keeps it long. Suckling.

TO RAKE. v. n.
 1. To search; to grope. It has always an idea of coarseness or noisiness.
 If you hide the crown
 Ev'n in your hearts, there will he take for it. Shakespeare.
 It is as offensive, as to take into a dunghill. South.
 Another finds the way to dye in grain;
 Or for the golden ore in rivers *take*s,
 Then melts the mafs. Dryden's Persius.
 One is for *take*ing in Chaucer for antiquated words, which are never to be reviv'd, but when found or significance is wanting. Dryden.
 After having made essays into it, as they do for coal in England, they take into the most promising parts. Addison.

2. To pass with violence.
 When Pas hand reached him to take,
 The fox on knees and elbows tumbled down:
 Pas could not stay, but over him did take,
 And crown'd the earth with his first touching crown. Sidon.
 The Belgians tack upon our rear,
 And *take*ing chase-guns through our stems they send. Dryden.
 RA'KER. n. f. [from take.] One that rakes.
 RA'KEHEL. n. f. [of this word the etymology is doubtful: as it is now written, it is apparently derived from take and hell, and may aptly represent a wretch whose life is passed in places of lewdness and wickedness: Skinner derives it from racaille, French, the rabble; Junius, from rekel, Dutch, a mongrel dog.] A wild, worthless, dissolute, debauched, sorry fellow.
 Out of the fire of these *take*hell horse-boys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern supplied. Spenser.
 The king, when he heard of Perkins's siege of Exeter, laid in sport, that the king of *take*hells was landed in the West, and that he hoped now to see him. Bacon.
 A *take*hell of the town, whose character is set off with excessive prodigality, prophaneness, intemperance and lust, is rewarded with a lady of great fortune to repair his own, which his vices had almost ruined. Swift.

RA'KEHELLY. adv. [from takehell.] Wild; dissolute.
 I scorn the *take*hell rout of our ragged rhimers, which without learning boast, without judgment jangle, and without reason rage and foam. Spenser's Pastorals.
 No breaking of windows or glasses for spight,
 And spoiling the goods for a *take*hell prank. Benj. Johnson.
 RA'KISH. adj. [from take.] Loose; lewd; dissolute.
 There seldom can be peculiarity in the love of a *take*ish heart. Clarissa.

TO RALLY. v. a. [rallier, Fr.]
 1. To put disordered or dispersed forces into order.
 With rallied arms to try what may be yet
 Regain'd in heav'n. Milton.
 Publick arguing serves to whet the wits of hereticks, and by shewing weak parts of their doctrines, prompts them to rally all their sophistry to fortify them with fallacy. D. of Pic.
 Luther deters men from solitariness; but he does not mean from a sober solitude, that rallies our scattered strengths, and prepares us against any new encounters from without. Atterb.

2. [Rallier, Fr.] To treat with slight contempt; to treat with satirical merriment.
 Honeycomb has not lived a month, for these forty years, out of the smoke of London, and rallies me upon a country life. Addison's Spectator.
 If after the reading of this letter, you find yourself in a humour rather to rally and ridicule, than to comfort me, I desire you would throw it into the fire. Addison.

RAM

Strephon had long confes'd his am'rous pain,
 Which gay Corinna rally'd with disdain. Gay.
 TO RALLY. v. n.

1. To come together in a hurry.
 If God should shew this perverse man a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing, he might say, that innumerable parts of matter chanced just then to rally together, and to form themselves into this new world. Tillotson.
 2. To come again into order.
 The Grecians rally, and their pow'rs unite;
 With fury charge us. Dryden's Aeneid.

3. To exercise satirical merriment.
 RAM. n. f. [ram, Saxon; ram, Dutch.]
 1. A male sheep; in some provinces, a tup.
 The ewes, being rank, turned to the rams. Shakespeare.
 An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram tender. Shakespeare.
 You may draw the bones of a ram's head hung with strings of beads and ribbands. Peacocks on Drawing.
 A ram their off'ring, and a ram their meat. Dryden.
 The ram, having pass'd the sea, serenely shines,
 And leads the year. Creech's Mamilus.

2. An instrument with an iron head to batter walls.
 Antony,
 Let not the piece of virtue, which is set
 As the cement of our love,
 To keep it builded, be the ram to batter
 The fortress of it. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra.
 Judas calling upon the Lord, who without any rams or engines of war did cast down Jericho, gave a fierce assault against the walls. 2 Mac. xii. 15.

TO RAM. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To drive with violence, as with a battering ram.
 Ram thou thy faithful tidings in mine ears,
 That long time have been barren. Shakespeare.
 Having no artillery nor engines, and finding that he could do no good by ramming with logs of timber, he set one of the gates on fire. Bacon's Henry VII.
 The charge with bullet, or paper wet and hard stopp'd, or with powder alone rammed in hard, maketh no great difference in the loudness of the report. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 A mariner loading his gun, while he was ramming in a cartridge, the powder took fire. Wifeman's Surgery.
 Here many poor people roll in vast balls of snow, which they ram together, and cover from the sun shine. Addison.
 A ditch drawn between two parallel furrows, was filled with some found materials, and rammed to make the foundation solid. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. To fill with any thing driven hard together.
 As when that devilish iron engine wrought
 In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
 With windy nitre and quick sulphur freight,
 And ram'd with bullet round ordain'd to kill. Fa. Queen.
 He that proves the king,
 To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
 Have we ram'd up our gates against the world. Shakespeare.
 They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth, but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.
 This into hollow engines, long and round,
 Thick ram'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire
 Dilated and infuriate, shall send forth
 Such implements of mischief, as shall dash
 To pieces. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
 Leave a convenient space behind the wall to ram in clay. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO RAMBLE. v. n. [rannelen, Dutch, to rove loosely and irregularly; to wander.]
 Shame contracts the spirits, fixes the ramblings of fancy, and gathers the man into himself. South.
 He that is at liberty to ramble in perfect darkness, what is his liberty better than if driven up and down as a bubble by the wind. Locke.
 Chapman has taken advantage of an immeasurable length of verse, notwithstanding which, there is scarce any paraphrase so loose and rambling as his. Pope.
 Never ask leave to go abroad, for you will be thought an idle rambling fellow. Swift's Directions to Postmen.
 O'er his ample sides the rambling sprays
 Luxuriant shoot. Thomson's Spring.

RAMBLER. n. f. [from the verb.] Wandering irregular excursion.
 This conceit puts us upon the ramble up and down for relief, 'till very weariness brings us at last to ourselves. L'Estrange.
 Coming home after a short Christmas ramble, I found a letter upon my table. Swift.
 She quits the narrow path of sense
 For a dear ramble through impertinence. Swift's Miscel.

RAMBLER. n. f. [from ramble.] Rover; wanderer.
 Says the rambler, we must e'en beat it out. L'Estrange.
 RAMBOOZE. n. f. A drink made of wine, ale, eggs and sugar.
 RAMBUSE. n. f. In the winter time; or of wine, milk, sugar and rosewater in the summer time. Bailey.

RAMMEKIN. n. f. [ramequin, Fr.] In cookery, small slices of bread covered with a farce of cheese and eggs. Bailey.
 RAMENTS. n. f. [ramenta, Lat.] Scrapings; shavings. Dill.
 RAMIFICATION. n. f. [ramification, Fr. from ramus, Latin.] Division or separation into branches; the act of branching out.
 By continuation of profane histories or other monuments kept together, the genealogies and ramifications of some single families to a vast extension may be preserved. Hale.
 As the blood and chyle pass together through the ramifications of the pulmonary artery, they will be still more perfectly mixed; but if a pipe is divided into branches, as they pass again subdivided, the red and white liquors, as they pass through the ramifications, will be more intimately mixed; the more ramifications, the mixture will be the more perfect. Arb.
 TO RAMIFY. v. a. [ramifier, Fr. ramus and facis, Lat.] To separate into branches.
 The mint, grown to have a pretty thick stalk, with the various and ramified roots, which it shot into the water, presented a spectacle not unpleasant to behold. Boyle.

TO RAMIFY. v. n. To be parted into branches.
 Asparagus affects the urine with a fetid smell, especially if cut when they are white; when they are older, and begin to ramify, they lose this quality. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 RAMMER. n. f. [from ram.]
 1. An instrument with which any thing is driven hard.
 The master bricklayer must try the foundations with an iron crow and rammer, to see whether the foundations are found. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
 2. The flick with which the charge is forced into the gun.
 A mariner loading a gun suddenly, while he was ramming in a cartridge, the powder took fire, and shot the rammer out of his hand. Wifeman's Surgery.

RAMMISH. adj. [from ram.] Strong scented.
 RAMMOUS. adj. [from ramus, Latin.] Branchy; consisting of branches.
 Which vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton's Opticks.
 A ramous efflorescence, of a fine white spar, found hanging from a crust of like spar, at the top of an old wrought cavern. Woodward on Fossils.

TO RAMP. v. n. [rampier, French; rampare, Italian; pempen, Saxon.]
 1. To leap with violence.
 Foaming tarr, their bridles they would champ,
 And trampling the fine element, would fiercely ramp. F. 2.
 Out of the thickest wood
 A ramping lyon rushed suddenly,
 Hunting full greedy after savage blood. Fairy Queen.
 They gape upon me with their mouths; as a ramping and roaring lion. Psalms xxii. 13.
 Upon a bull, that deadly bellowed,
 Two horrid lions ramp'd, and seiz'd off. Chapin.
 Sporting the lion ramp'd; and in his paw
 Dandled the kid. Milton.

 For Banquo's issue, Duncan have I murder'd;
 Put rancour in the vessel of my peace
 Only for them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Such ambush
 Waited with hellish rancour imminent. Milton.
 No authors draw upon themselves more displeasure, than those who deal in political matters, which is justly incurred, considering that spirit of rancour and virulence, with which works of this nature abound. Addison's Freeholder, N° 40.
 Presbyterians and their abettors, who can equally go to a church or conventicle, or such who bear a personal rancour towards the clergy. Swift.
 RAND. n. f. [rand, Dutch.] Border; seam: as, the rand of a woman's shoe.
 RA'NDOM. n. f. [random, Fr.] Want of direction; want of rule or method; chance; hazard; roving motion.
 Thy words at random argue thy inexperience. Milton.
 He lies at random carelessly diffus'd,
 With languid head unprop'd,
 As one past hope abandon'd.
 Fond love his darts at random throws,
 And nothing springs from what he sows. Milton.
 The striker must be dense, and in its best velocity: the angle, which the miffive is to mount by, if we will have it go to its furthest random, must be the half of a right one; and the figure of the miffive must be such, as may give scope to the air to bear it. Digby.

 Presbyterians and their abettors, who can equally go to a church or conventicle, or such who bear a personal rancour towards the clergy. Swift.
 RAND. n. f. [rand, Dutch.] Border; seam: as, the rand of a woman's shoe.
 RA'NDOM. n. f. [random, Fr.] Want of direction; want of rule or method; chance; hazard; roving motion.
 Thy words at random argue thy inexperience. Milton.
 He lies at random carelessly diffus'd,
 With languid head unprop'd,
 As one past hope abandon'd.
 Fond love his darts at random throws,
 And nothing springs from what he sows. Milton.
 The striker must be dense, and in its best velocity: the angle, which the miffive is to mount by, if we will have it go to its furthest random, must be the half of a right one; and the figure of the miffive must be such, as may give scope to the air to bear it. Digby.

RA'NCOUR. n. f. [rancour, old Fr.] Invererate malignity; malice; steadfast implacability; standing hate.
 His breast full of rancor like canker to treat. Tupper.
 As two brave knights in bloody fight
 With deadly rancour he enraged found. Fairy Queen.
 All the way that they fled for very rancour and despite; in their return, they utterly consumed and wasted whatsoever they had before left unspoiled. Spenser's State of Ireland.
 Rancour will out, proud prelate; in thy face
 I see thy fury. Shakespeare, Henry VI. p. ii.
 It issues from the rancour of a villain,
 A recreant and most degen'rate traitor. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
 For Banquo's issue, Duncan have I murder'd;
 Put rancour in the vessel of my peace
 Only for them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Such ambush
 Waited with hellish rancour imminent. Milton.
 No authors draw upon themselves more displeasure, than those who deal in political matters, which is justly incurred, considering that spirit of rancour and virulence, with which works of this nature abound. Addison's Freeholder, N° 40.
 Presbyterians and their abettors, who can equally go to a church or conventicle, or such who bear a personal rancour towards the clergy. Swift.
